Indigenous HIV/AIDS Research Training (IHART) Program

This application, in response to PAR-06-494 “NIMH Research Education Grants (R25),” is designed to develop the Indigenous HIV/AIDS Research Training (IHART) program to train a cadre of NIMH-funded junior and mid-career research scientists in the area of HIV/AIDS and mental health prevention. IWRI and its associated research scientists, staff, and their affiliates will provide a supportive and fertile environment for the program. The IHART program specific aims are to 1) Facilitate the development of a cadre of junior and mid-career scientists capable of serving as PIs on extramurally funded HIV/AIDS prevention studies with indigenous populations through an intensive 27-month mentorship program comprising a 2-day winter roundtable; a 2-week summer training institute; year-round multidisciplinary learning opportunities via seminar series, virtual workshops, and presentations; seed funding ($20,000) for pilot projects; as well as statistical, administrative, editorial, and technical assistance for developing grant applications, conducting primary or secondary data analyses, and writing manuscripts for publication; 2) Establish a network of mentors with expertise in HIV research, mental health, trauma, and substance; 3) Launch a website and listserv to facilitate the sharing of relevant research, information, and opportunities; 4) Conduct a process evaluation of the program to identify factors key to its success.

Program at NCAIPRC and UNM and UW: Research for Change: CBPR Multicultural Cross Site

*The National Congress of American Indians Policy Research Center (NCAIPRC) proposes to partner with the University of New Mexico (UNM), the University of Washington (UW), and Community Based Participatory Research. (CBPR) projects nation-wide to assess how variability in partnership processes, under varying contexts and conditions are associated with CBPR system changes and other capacity outcomes. The overall goal of this multi-site research proposal of CBPR intervention processes and outcomes is to create a rich learning community of practice of academic and community partners from up to 20-25 NARCH and NCMHD. Through our new CBPR community of practice (CoP), we hope to simultaneously advance the science of CBPR and democratize the creation of knowledge in order to produce system changes (i.e., new policies and practices), and other capacity outcomes that will benefit tribal and other minority communities, as well as local, state, and federal policy. The system and capacity changes have been specifically targeted because of their association with improved health and reduced health disparities within diverse communities.*

Caregiving Dyads in Vulnerable Communities

This research will examine risk and protective factors associated with physical and mental health outcomes among elder care recipients (CRs) and their informal caregivers (CGs) from vulnerable sexual minority communities. With the significant increase in the older population and the trend toward noninstitutional care, Americans increasingly face the challenge of providing care to diverse elders with chronic illness or disability. This study will examine the impact of stigma, discrimination and dyadic relationships between elder CRs and their CGs in these vulnerable communities, and how they influences health disparities for both members of the caregiving dyad.

The Elimination of Health Disparities through Translation Research

This study assesses the translatability of an HIV/STD prevention intervention called RESPECT among American Indian and Alaska Native (AI/AN) youth. RESPECT has been shown to be efficacious in reducing sexual risk behaviors and the incidence of sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) in public STD clinics among ethnically and racially heterogeneous heterosexual adult (ages 15-39) populations. To do this, the project does the following: [1] With tribal partnerships, regional alliances, and national collaboration, we will use the Theory of Diffusion of Innovations to guide the development of a dissemination plan for RESPECT with AI/AN communities; [2] using the RE-AIM framework of enhancing external validity, we will implement the RESPECT intervention in school-based clinics in a specific AI community; and [3] evaluate the potential diffusion of RESPECT based on the results of [1] and [2].

HIV Intervention Science Training Program for Minority New Investigators

This grant proposes to develop and facilitate the growth of a new cadre-4 per year for a total of 12-of REM scientists capable of serving as PIs on extramurally funded studies in the areas of HIV prevention research on the co-occurring problems of posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD), trauma and related mental health issues among REM groups and on the design of HIV culturally-congruent prevention interventions to address these co-occurring problems that reflect and drive health disparities. The proposed program will have a strong set of research training activities and a network of committed and active mentors for promising REM trainees. An existing network of 22 senior HIV and mental health researchers have been recruited and committed to (1) serve as mentors, (2) recruit promising REM trainees for the program, and (3) recruit additional mentors. The proposed training program will utilize the research resources and infrastructure at the CUSSW Social Intervention Group (SIG).

NRSA Postdoctoral Training Program in HIV Prevention

This competing continuation application requests renewed support for the National Research Service Award postdoctoral fellowship training program in HIV prevention behavioral research at the Center for AIDS Intervention Research (CAIR), Medical College of Wisconsin. The HIV prevention research training program prepares postdoctoral fellows to become productive independent researchers, with a curriculum that includes coursework; seminars in HIV behavioral research, ethics, and HIV foundation areas; and active participation in multiple research studies. The proposal includes a CAIR HIV Prevention Research Postdoctoral Fellowship Program Minority Recruitment Advisory Board. Advisory board members review recruitment plans prior to each recruitment cycle and suggest additional opportunities for reaching, and subsequently enrolling, fellowship candidates from underrepresented groups. Additionally, they lend their experience to the fellowship program to help CAIR enhance the fellowship experiences of minority fellows admitted to the program.

Behavioral Health, Biomedical, & Resiliency Indicators across 5 Tribal Communities

This application in response to PAR-07-379 Behavioral and Social Science Research on Understanding and Reducing Health Disparities (R01). To gain insight into the causes and solutions to health and disabilities disparities, develop tribal research capacity, enhance tribal partnerships, and collect biological and behavioral health prevalence data, the study will assess theoretical, methodological, and substantive issues concerning health risk behaviors and biomedical outcomes, through examining multi-level pathways from traumatic stress to mental and physical health, substance use, resiliency and risk behaviors and disparities among 5 Coast Salish tribal communities. Furthermore, the project will enhance tribal research expertise in the design and development of innovative culturally grounded epidemiological health survey with corresponding tribally-based conceptual models; cutting-edge decolonizing research methodologies; culturally-based measurement development; and innovative data analytic strategies.
